MBA students, can you assure an employer that you understand how information systems influence the business?

Whatever your business passion, building a foundation in MIS will enhance your career options.

If your Wednesday 4-6:30pm is open for a class, we have two great options.

MGMT 630 (section 001) – Management of Information Systems (CRN# 34092)

This course is for students seeking a managerial understanding of MIS and the impact of information systems on organizations. No prereqs required. Contact Laurie Schatzberg, laurie@mgt.unm.edu, with questions.

MGMT 639 (section 003) – Advanced Topics in MIS (System & Network Admin) (CRN# 34095)

This course is for students who have already taken some MIS courses or have developed IT skills in their careers, contact Prof. Steve Burd, burd@mgt.unm.edu, to enroll.

Anderson Professor Steve Walsh was identified as "one of the top fifty ranking researchers in the Technology Innovation Management field" by Elsevier. Walsh has not only won the award for the most recent five year period, but is one of only seven researchers who have maintained this status for an entire decade. The award will be formally presented at the International Association for the Management of Technology (IAMOT) conference in April.

Lucie Wang has been recognized as one of the few Distinguished Net Impact Members for 2008. This is a great acknowledgment of Lucie's continuing efforts to let the Anderson and University communities know about Net Impact. This is also the first time a UNM student has been so recognized by the national organization.
